About the Reves Center

The Wendy and Emery Reves Center for International Studies was established at the College of William and Mary in 1989 to raise awareness and understanding of international affairs, both on campus and in the community. The Center promotes the goals of international cooperation and conflict resolution advocated by Emery Reves through rigorous academic programs, overseas study opportunities, exchanges of international students and scholars, student-faculty research projects, and a host of special programs designed to address current issues in international relations and cultural studies.

Note: For information about foreign students studying at the College of William and Mary, contact the International Students, Scholars, and Program Office.
